Thomas Mercer Antarctic Endurance

Intrepid explorers need the finest of instruments so when the Royal Navy and Royal Marines were searching for a precise timekeeper for a challenging expedition who else to turn to but Thomas Mercer?

The Antarctic Endurance chronometer is a one-off piece created specifically for the Antarctic Endurance 2016 – a two year research programme and expedition which will retrace Shackleton's dangerous voyage on the James Caird. The chronometer has been specially adapted for heavy-sea navigation and re-introduces the use of "trawler suspension" to counteract the sudden and violent movements often felt far out at sea.

Housed in a smoked eucalyptus box and crafted from highly polished stainless steel, the chronometer is stylish yet durable with an eight-day power reserve, hand made dials and extra-white crystal glass.

The Thomas Mercer Antarctic Endurance chronometer is a unique piece, it will be released for sale upon its return from the expedition in March 2016 with price on request.
